Train fatality near Anderson

Man on tracks struck by southbound train

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — At roughly 10:30 a.m. Sunday, November 16, a man was fatally struck by a train while on the railroad tracks near Anderson.

The incident occurred near milepost 399 of the Alaska Railroad's main line, north of Anderson. The passenger train had originated in Fairbanks and was headed to Anchorage. The Alaska State Troopers and Alaska Railroad Police responded to the scene.

As an active rail transportation corridor, the track right-of-way – extending 100 feet on either side of the track – is not open to the public.
